St. James' Palane, where the peace delegates are meeting, sheltered distinguished guests in 1914 when the allied sovereignn went to London to take part in the peace rejoicings. The state apartments were fitted up in magnificent style for the accommodation of Cara Alexandre I and King Frederick William III of Fruesta. The first Emperor William, then a boy of seventeen, accumpanied his father, this being the first of his many visits to England. The farmous Blucher was lodged in a house on the west side of the amhassadors' court. Here he spent part of every day of his visit, seated at one of the drawing-room windows, smoking a huge German porcelain pipe, and howing to the crowds who focked to see the "Conglicer of Napoleon."

St. James' Palace had among its royal memories that of what, if importure, was the greatest imposture in British history. Here on June 19, 1888, was born the Old Prelender—an event which precipitated the bloodless revolution of five months later. There is a contemporary plan of the palace, wherein are the dotted lines that show the way of the infant (sold to have been carried in a warming pan) to the Queen's bed chamber.
